In Education Finance In The New Millenium: Spirits Of The Ancient Sands, Dr. Jane Doe provides a comprehensive overview of the current state of education finance. She examines the factors that have contributed to the rising cost of education, and she offers a vision for the future of education finance.

Dr. Doe argues that the current system of education finance is unsustainable. She points out that the federal government has been shifting the cost of education to states and families, and that this has led to a decline in the quality of education.

Dr. Doe also argues that the current system of education finance is unfair. She points out that students from wealthy families have a much better chance of getting a college degree than students from poor families.

Dr. Doe offers a number of proposals to reform the system of education finance. She calls for increased federal funding for education, and she argues that states should adopt policies that make college more affordable for students from low-income families.

Education Finance In The New Millenium: Spirits Of The Ancient Sands is a must-read for anyone interested in the future of education finance. It provides a comprehensive overview of the current state of education finance and offers a vision for the future.
