John McCain was an American politician and military officer who served as a United States Senator from Arizona from 1987 until his death in 2018. He was the Republican nominee for President of the United States in the 2008 election, which he lost to Barack Obama.

McCain was born in 1936 in Panama, where his father was stationed as a naval officer. He graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1958 and served as a naval aviator during the Vietnam War. He was shot down over North Vietnam in 1967 and spent five and a half years as a prisoner of war.

After his release from prison, McCain returned to the United States and continued his naval career. He retired from the Navy in 1981 and entered politics. He was elected to the House of Representatives in 1982 and to the Senate in 1986.

McCain was a moderate Republican who was known for his independence and willingness to work across party lines. He was a strong supporter of the military and a vocal critic of terrorism. He also worked to improve relations with Cuba and North Korea.

In 2008, McCain was the Republican nominee for President of the United States. He lost to Barack Obama, but he remained a popular figure in the Republican Party. He continued to serve in the Senate until his death in 2018.

Legacy

John McCain was a war hero, a statesman, and a patriot. He was a man of courage, integrity, and independence. He will be remembered as one of the most consequential figures in American history.

McCain's legacy is one of service. He served his country in the military for over two decades. He served the people of Arizona in the House of Representatives and the Senate for over three decades. And he served the American people as a presidential candidate and a senator for over a decade.

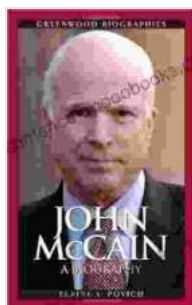

McCain's service was not without its challenges. He was shot down over North Vietnam and spent five and a half years as a prisoner of war. He was diagnosed with brain cancer in 2017. But through it all, he never gave up on his country or his people.

McCain's legacy is one of hope. He believed that anything is possible if we work together. He believed that the American people are capable of great things. And he believed that we can build a better future for ourselves and our children.
