Set in a post-apocalyptic America, the book follows a group of survivors as they struggle to rebuild their lives and come to terms with the horrors they have witnessed.

The novel begins with the detonation of a nuclear bomb in the skies over New York City. The blast wave incinerates everything in its path, and the resulting fallout spreads deadly radiation across the country. In the aftermath of the attack, a group of survivors emerge from their shelters, desperate to find food, water, and safety.

As the survivors travel across the ravaged landscape, they encounter other survivors, some who are friendly and others who are hostile. They must also contend with the dangers of radiation poisoning, starvation, and disease. Along the way, they learn about the terrible fate that has befallen their country and the world.
