

Unveiling Antiracist Literature Instruction: Transforming Language and Literacy Education for White Students

Empowering White Educators to Champion Critical Literacy and Transformative Change

In an era marked by racial injustice and systemic inequities, the realm of education holds immense power to ignite meaningful change. As educators, we bear the responsibility to critically examine our pedagogical practices and challenge the pervasive effects of racism that perpetuate disparities in our classrooms.

The Imperative for Antiracist Instruction

Antiracist literature instruction emerges as a pivotal strategy for confronting racism in language and literacy education. It goes beyond mere diversity representation to address the underlying power dynamics and structures that maintain racial hierarchies. By engaging students with literature that explores race, identity, and social justice, educators foster critical literacy skills that empower students to:
